both houses of Congress the report of the Board of Army Eogineers and Architects appointed last February to receive and recommend plans for a memorial bridge across the Potomac river, extending from the old Naval Observatory to a point directly across the river on the old Arlington estate. The board recommends the construction of a bridge which will cost about $4.860.000. $4,860,000.

The report views at length the plans submitted by four prominent bridge arch t cts and engineers, and selects those of William H. Burr, of New York, as conforming most closely to the general specifications called for.

The general outline specifications governing the competition, issued un-der date of July 21, 1899, called for the presentation of two designs for a bridge with a draw opening; one design to provide for street care as well as for ordinary vehicles and for pedestrians; the street care to be below (underneath) the highway. The width of the structure to be sixty feet, including sidewalks. Material mainly granite and stee!. The second (alternate) design to be for a bridge with draw opening, but without provision for street cars.

Mr. Burr's design, the one approved by the board, with a few alterations, is summarized in the report as follows:

summarized in the report as follows:

"This is a design for a single deck bridge, 60 feet in width between railings, providing for two sidewalks, each 10 feet wide and a roadway 40 feet wide. This design makes no provision for street railway tracks. The total length of the open work of the bridge proper and approaches is about 3,400 lend.

"The clear head room under the crows of the arch is 53 feet. A clear nead room of about 51 feet at low water is provided under three arches for a width of 50 feet at the centre and of shout 45 feet four inches for a width of 100 feet. The face of the arch ring is of granite but the construc-Sold by Claude M. Lennon, Sole Agt. the Melan system, there being five main concrete steel ribs. The granite arch ring is 5 feet 6 inches deep at the crown and 9 feet 6 inches deep at the spring, while the concrete steel ribe are 30 inches deep at the spring. A solid masonry spandrel wall, partly of granite and partiy of concrete, ree's upon the gran-ite arch ring. The asphalt roadway and granolithic sidewalks are support-ed by concrete floor arches between I-beams. "The draw span has two bascule arms supported on trunnions, balanced by rear extensions and counterweights.
The clear opening is about 135 feet, the clear span at low water level 159 feet, and the span from centre to centre of trunnions 170 feet. The bascule arms are composed of fire steal traces of the trunnions 170 feet. The bascule arms are composed of five steel trusses of the lattice girder type with parallel cords twelve feet six inches deep between centres. The clear head room is about fifty-one feet when the draw is closed. The floor is to be of asphalt cork blocks, melted to fit the buckle plates, which are supported by the floor beams and stringers carried by the trusses. It and stringers carried by the trusses. It is proposed to operate the draw by four fi 'y horse-power electric motors. The Washing on approach is to consist of twelve six y-foot span masonry arches, back of which is an earthern embankment about five hundred and fifty feet long.

"The sixty-foot span masonry arches are full semi-circular, the springing line being twenty-four feet above low water, the rise above the spring thirty feet, and the radius of the intrados thirty feet. The arch is constructed of the magneticals and in the same mansime materials and in the same manner as the 192-foot masonry arch above described. The granite arch ring i-four feet deep throughout, while the concrete and steel ribs are sixteen inches deep at the crown and forty-eight inches deep at the spring.

The principal divisions of the bridge

are marked by massive masonry arches and towers, decorated with emblematic satisfactory.
